THE ROYAL BRIDE.

There was a bridal in the palace—the dridal of the eldest and most lovely Princess--a girl in the bud of life-the spring time of existence, a beautiful creature, radiant in smiles, exquisitely graceful; and a powerful alliance had been formed worthy of a Princess so lovely,

Her dress was richly decorated with jewels the long silk vail fell to her feet, and a crown of gold, surmounted by a chaplet of orange flowers, rested on her brow. At the altar stood the priest, surrounded by the Emperor and Empress, the Ambassador and court, waiting with eagerness the coming of the bride.

"Ah! my daughter," said the Emperor as the Princess approached, "thou hast delayed coming!" and he led her forward. The Ambassador slowly knelt down, averting his head from the guests, and the Princess followed his example, seemingly unconscious of the presence of the court; suddenly her eyes met those of the Ambassador fixed upon her, and turning deadly pale, she made a sign for the ceremony to commence; the ring was placed upon her finger; and her small, white hand rested for one moment in the Ambassador's; the blessing was pronounced; the heads of both were meekly bent; and glancing timidly at the still kneeling bridegroom, the Princess rose and knelt to ber father. He raised her in his arms; and, turning to the Empress, presented to the court the youthful Queen of Germany. "God bless her—may she be happy!" was the thrill-ing exclamation, as the bridal party left the saloon, followed by the younger sisters of the bride, and the graceful, mirth-loving courtiers. "What, in tears!" said the Empress, kindly, when her daughter, overpowered by her concealed emotion, sobbed violently on her mother's bosom; "this is not right, my child. Trust me, you shall hear of us often, and though absent, we shall never forget you; let me dry away your tears, tor, bark! I hear sounds—footsteps are approaching. "I trust your Majesty will pardon me," said the Ambassador, hurriedly, retreating on beholding the Queen of Germany alone, for the Empress had retired. "I was not aware your Majesty was here; this pavilion is generally de-

"So it would be now, but I have come hither to see the sun set for the last time in mine own band, playing beneath these windows; you cannot blame me.'

"My liege Lady, I would not dare to breathe a word of disrespect against one so good and beautiful. Believe me, I would die to save you one moment's agony.

"Nay, is life so utterly valueless?"

"Utterly, for its only charm is lost." "Impossible," said the Queen, softly, "you have much to live for-fame; wealth and doubtless love is yours; say there is another for whom you would die, save me.'

'Nay, but one-forgive me, liege Lady, but one; she cannot be mine-she is lost forever to

"I pity you," said the Queen, tears rushing to her eyes, "is she wedded—this false one, is she wedded?"

"Yes, oh! yes; but she was not false, I did not dare to tell my love. I knelt and prayed for strength to wish her happiness. I have asked it for her, but she knows it not. "Were your situations in life equal?" again said the Queen. "No!" ne answered, "she was far above me -too good-too beautiful for me.' "Ah! had she not been wedded, I could have given you rank, wealth equal to hers, and bestowed her ou you; should you have been "Lidy, she did not-could not love me; judge my feelings when unrepiningly she gave her hand unto another. Lady, you do not know my misery." "How canst thou tell that?" said the Queen her cheeks turning lividly white at the warmth with which he spoke. "If youth was exempt from trials how could we feel for others' sorrows; if I had none of my own, I could not this night weep with you.'

"Trials, Lady!" said the Ambassador. "Yes, bitter trials-very bitter; but it is not meet thus to explain the secrets of my heart; let me bid you be happy, and, forever,

"Forever, farewell!-why?-dearest Lady, why?-say, in aught I have offended you: forgive me, I implore; part not in anger with me turn and look kindly on me again?" and the kneeling Ambassador caught the bottom of her "believe me, I had not dared to tell you of my love, but when you spoke so kind-

"On, my God, have mercy; he returns my love !- protect me, pity me, weak, sinful that | S. D. HARPER. I am-I, whose heart is his-how can I meet his Sovereign." Saying which, the Queen fell prostrate to the earth, supported by the Ambassador. "Leave me, leave," she said, Alexandria Va.—We have on hand a large when she opened her eyes; "leave me alone stock of the above named goods, which were now; but, oh! do not breathe to a single soul my purchased at low figures, and will be sold at a weak confession of to-night."

weak confession of to-night.' "Never-never. It would be an insult to stay to oppress you with professions of love you may not return. I have caused you this unhappiness; but do not reproach me, spare me; for your anger I cannot bear. Keep this as a memorial of one who loved you, one who must ever love you -my first, my last love, farewell. The Queen gazed at the picture given to her, and drawing from her bosom a cross placed it in the hand of the Ambassador; he pressed the hand that offered it to his lips, and rushing through the corridor returned no more. On arriving with the youthful bride at the court of Germany he threw up his diplomatic engagement, and quitted the court forever; but after
